

THE JOURNAL

—We have received the details of the news by the Duchess d'Orleans, but it is not so late as that brought by the Sarah Sands published at the same time, nor late as that which we published yesterday brought by the Acadia.—We give below a few items. The advices from Paris are to the 26th ult.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.
Our advices from Paris of the 16th ult. We take the following from Galignani of the 26th.

The Provisional Government appears greatly embarrassed to know what system it can adopt to check the list of votes at the elections. This is a matter of great difficulty, for as every elector will have to inscribe as many names as there are to be deputies, there will be some millions of names inscribed. Thus as there are about 300,000 electors in the department of the Seine, and as there are 34 deputies to be returned, there will have to be, supposing all the electors to vote, 300,000 times 34 names written, or in all 40,200,000. The Provisional Government, however, calculates that only from 450,000 to 500,000 names will be written, and that no candidate can be elected without having about 35,000 or 40,000 votes. The Government has changed a number of the Academies des Sciences to draw up a plan for checking the votes.

The Prefect of Police, M. Cassidiere, has published an appeal to the working classes to refrain from taking part in the promenades and demonstrations which are made at night. He says, that they are calculated to cause disorder and to enable the enemies of the republic to turn them to their own advantage.

The provisional government received yesterday a deputation of the working classes belonging to the Orleans Railway, who came to present to the republic a sum of 2,241,700 francs, which they had collected among themselves.

A deputation of foreigners resident in France have presented a petition to the provisional government, signed by 2000 persons of this description, praying that all foreigners who have been two years resident in this country, may, on a simple declaration of their wish for naturalization, be entitled to all the rights of French citizens.

A considerable number of Germans and Belgians left Paris the day before yesterday for the Northern railroad to return to their native country.

Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, two days ago, commenced his service as a National Guard, and was placed as a sentinel at the Post de la Chapelle. He belongs to the fourth company of the first battalion, of the first legion.

About 400 of the Poles living at Paris, assembled yesterday to form the first column for returning to their own country. They have written to their fellow countrymen in the provinces to join them either at Paris or at Cologne. They have issued an appeal to the republic of France to supply them with arms.

ENGLAND.
The Queen and the Infant Princess were as well as could be expected.

AUSTRIA.
No later dates from Austria than the 15th of March from Vienna. Private letters state the probability that the Emperor Ferdinand would be compelled to leave his throne when the people should learn of the turn affairs had taken at Berlin.

PRUSSIA.
The sitting of the deputies of the city of Breslau on the 17th, was one of extreme importance. The following resolutions were passed with stormy acclamations:

"The immediate arming of the Burgers.

"A petition to His Majesty to relinquish every alliance with Russia that has reference to coercing the Southern States of Germany.

"To dismiss the present Cabinet and replace it by men who possess the public confidence."

The disturbances which took place on the 16th, during which a division of the Cuirassiers fell upon the peaceful multitude, have had the worst consequences.

A general in command refused to supply the burglers with arms the district associations resolved that every man should arm himself as best he could, and repair at six in the evening to an appointed rendezvous.

In the brief space of one hour, every gunshop was cleared of its arms at high prices; the students had their rifles sharpened by the knife-grinders in the streets, and every body put on the black, red, and gold cockade and ribbons.

The liberation of the brothers Hoffman, who were imprisoned for high treason, was forcibly effected. After this the burglers took possession of all the principal posts of the city and the night passed off with tolerable quiet and order.

This day threatens to be very stormy, and the censorship of the local newspapers will be resolutely resisted.

The Prince of Prussia has, it is said, left Berlin for England.

The civic authorities have announced by proclamation that the government of Prussia and their brethren who fell in the late contest, and the maintenance of the families of the deceased, will be undertaken at the expense of the city of Berlin.

Count von Arnim has been confirmed in the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and still is President of the Ministry.

REPUBLICAN PROCLAMATION IN PRUSSIA.
A telegraphic dispatch, dated Metz, March 24th, states that a Republic has been proclaimed at Berlin. The King had been dethroned, and his Majesty was proclaimed Emperor.

Royalists humiliated, exhausted, after bloody collisions, which, with the least foresight or wisdom must so easily have been prevented, must now disappear from Prussian ground.

The people are not satisfied with simply dethroning the monarchy, but hold him and his ministers prisoners. The Temple after the 10th of August has come again.

We hope that the similarity of fate between Louis XVI and Frederick William will go no further. Liberty is magnanimous and does not strike a powerless enemy.

The results of the proclamation of a republic at Berlin are immense. Berlin is the heart of Germany as Paris is of France and henceforth the Germanic Union becomes a reality.

RUSSIA.
The following is the preamble to the Ukase of the Czar of Russia, ordering an army of 150,000 men into the field.

Events have occurred in the west of Europe which betray the bad intention of destroying all legal authority. The treaty and alliances which unite Russia and the United States of Germany, impose upon us the sacred duty to take timely measures by placing a part of our army in the field, so that it events require it, we may interpose a solid barrier to the destructive flood of anarchy.

BRANCH MINT AT NEW YORK.—A bill is before the Senate of the United States providing for the establishment of a branch mint in the city of New York. The first section appropriates $250,000 for the purchase of the site, the erection of a suitable building, and completing the necessary combinations of machinery.

GEORGIA.—The La Grange Reporter of the 13th says:—"The fruit and grain crops promise great abundance, and cotton buds equally fair. Indeed, the spring is forward and favorable everywhere, and if we have no more frosts and snow, the season, the fruit, grain and cotton, that will be made this year, will be incalculable."

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ACADIA!

INTERESTING AND EXCITING INTELLIGENCE.

REVOLUTIONS PROGRESSING.

War declared against Austria by Lombardy.—The Austrians defeated—Savoy a Republic—Liberal Governments established in Baden, Wurttemberg, and Saxony—Movements in Russia and Prussia—Trouble in Spain—France quiet—Threatened disturbances in Ireland—Great Charlist demonstration prohibited—Serious decline in Breadstuffs—Decline in Cotton, &c., &c., &c.

Boston, April 21.

The royal mail steamer Acadia arrived at port-to-day having sailed from Liverpool on the 5th inst.

The general revolutionary commotion in Europe is spreading with rapid increase.

Upwards of 30,000 troops have crossed from Piedmont into Sardinia.

Lombardy has declared war against Austria, marched her troops direct to Milan. The Austrians were defeated everywhere.

All the Italian Duchies had openly engaged in insurrections.

Charles Albert, it is expected, will soon have 24,000 troops at his command, sufficient to liberate Lombardy, and threaten Austria's existence, even by marching troops to the city of Vienna.

Savoy has declared in favor of a republic, and liberal governments have been established in the provinces of Baden, Wurttemberg and Saxony.

The triumphs of the people in Hanover have been complete.

The King of Prussia has promised extensive constitutional reforms, but has exasperated the Emperor of Russia by encouraging the independence of Poland.

Emperor Nicholas has ordered every man in Russia and Poland between the ages of 15 and 35 to remove to the interior of Russia for the purpose of concentrating a vast army, in order to crush the republican efforts in Belgium.

Holland remains quiet.

Tuscany has refused to acknowledge the French Republic.

An emuete had occurred at Madrid, in which many people and soldiers were killed. Queen Christina had fled.

The parliament constituted by the French government, had ordered the army to assemble on the frontier, to watch the movements in Italy.

On the 31st inst., Lamartine received the address of Smith O'Bryan and the members of the Repeal Association. He made a speech full of dignity and sympathy, but declared that the policy of France was non-intervention.

Paris remains quiet. At Lyons tranquility had been restored.

Lord John Russell has reported the declaration which his government would throw its entire weight and influence to maintain order.

Affairs in Ireland wear a more menacing aspect. Additional troops had been ordered from England, and were arriving in Ireland.

The repealers in the city were equally energetic, and are supported by the provinces which are now electing delegates to the council to be held at Liverpool, to advise the government to keep within the limits prescribed by the Convention Act.

Repealers now openly avow Repeal. That union is not sufficient to satisfy the grievances—that a republic is the only remedy. The great Charlist demonstration to come off on the 10th inst., is forbidden by the English government. All arrangements, however, are going on. Carriages are preparing for petitioners. Banners and insignia are all in a state of forwardness. The proclamation is setting forth every one from attending the meeting only increased the excitement and called for more remonstrances. The Charlists have determined by unanimous resolution to hold the demonstration meeting at the risk of their lives despite the government threats. They then issued a contra proclamation to hold a large meeting, to carry, no arms in the procession.

O'Connor advised the withdrawal of the deposits in the Savings Bank, amounting to 25,000,000 pounds sterling, as that would embarrass the government more than an armed attack. The English government seems determined to bring matters to an issue. Large bodies of cavalry, infantry and artillery had been drafted into the metropolis. How matters will end it is not possible to conjecture.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.—BY THE ACADIA.—The following are the latest quotations of the English markets, brought by the Acadia:

LIVERPOOL, April 8.

Best Western Canal Flour 25/27; Baltimore 25/26; White Wheat 6/7; 104; Red 6/4; Corn 22/23; Meal 10/11; per bush.

Breadstuffs have seriously declined within the past fortnight, particularly Corn.

The quotations for Cotton are, Upland Ordinary 36/34; Fair 44; Goods 44/54; Mobile Ordinary 36/34; Fine 44; Goods 44; Sea Island 72/10; stained 40/7. The market was tolerably firm at the close, but a further decline of 1d. had been sustained.

The sales of the week ending last evening amounted to 20,700 bales, including Upland 31,600; Orleans 34,500; Alabama 31,400; Sea Island, 7,800. The stock in port amounts to 325,000 bales, including 175,000 American. The operations at Manchester still continue on a very limited scale.

There are no quotations for provisions.

ADDITIONAL COMMERCIAL NEWS, BY THE ACADIA.

LIVERPOOL, April 8th.

The quotations for Provisions are as follows: Western Long Middle, duty free, 52s 3d; Corn 6/10 1/2; Hams 15/28 1/2; Baltimore dry salted 6/10 1/2; Dried Hemp 24/10; hatched 4/3s. Land has given away under the heavy supplies that have come forward; a further decline is anticipated. Pork, prime continues active at full rates, other qualities are dull.

Tallow is active with improving tendency; the market, however, is steady, and sales are greatly restricted on account of the continental difficulties.

The Iron Market is dull and depressed. The demand has diminished, both for export and home consumption. Glasgow pig, mixed numbers, are quoted at 22s, and bar at 25 10s per ton, deliverable. In Wales there is no disposition to operate, but stocks are light, and a restoration of confidence in monetary affairs would improve prices.

THE CITIZENS OF St. Louis on Tuesday last gave an enthusiastic reception to General Shields. Thousands greeted him upon the wharf.

Later from Mexico.

FURTHER PROCEEDINGS OF THE COURT OF INQUIRY, &c., &c.

The British West Indian Mail Steamer Acadia, arrived on the 10th inst. On the 14th, with later proceedings of the Court of Inquiry, a portion of which we can only make room for in our columns this morning. Below we give a summary of the Mexican news, from the ample files of Mexican papers and correspondence now before us.

As to the ratification of the Treaty, the news by this arrival is not very promising. At last Congress, from Queretaro, a quorum had not been formed in Congress. The 11th, contains a long article condemning the conduct of the members of Congress in delaying the session. Sixteen members were still wanted in the Chamber, and two in the Senate, to constitute a quorum. A correspondent at Queretaro, of the Monitor, thinks the necessary number will soon be in attendance, and that when Congress once gets together, Herrera will be chosen President. A letter from the legislatures dated April 2, states that the Father was arrested at Huejutla by the Prefect, Don Cristobal Andrade. The arrest is officially announced in the Tampico Noticiero.

Capt. Cannolly, of the La. Mounted Battalion, arrived at Vera Cruz, escorting the mail from Puebla, on the 12th inst. Capt. C. met with a great many guerrillas, but they made no opposition to his march. He also met a Mexican train of eight wagons, the conductors of which reported that the guerrillas had levied a contribution of $300 on their merchandise.

Col. Hays' the Ranger, arrived at Vera Cruz on the 10th, from Jalapa. The Free American understands that Hays' Regiment will shortly be disbanded.

WE copied on yesterday an article from the Louisville Journal giving credit to Cassius M. Clay as one of the number who some time since voluntarily stepped forward and paid the debts of the Hon. Henry Clay. We are glad to perceive by that paper of Monday, that this is a mistake. Cassius M. Clay had nothing to do with that arrangement. The Journal was led into the error by the "false phraseology" of Cassius' letter. The Journal says:

"We have reason to believe, that, in our remarks Saturday upon Cassius M. Clay's letter, we were led into error in regard to a single point by the writer's phraseology. He says to the Hon. Henry Clay, 'We paid your debts.' This means that the Hon. Henry Clay was one of the contributors, but perhaps it implies the construction that the Whigs, the Hon. Henry Clay's political friends, paid his debts. Whatever the intention of the remark may be, we are assured that Cassius M. Clay did not contribute one dollar, and that the contributors, instead of being many in number, were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen, visited Lexington, and without even seeing Mr. Clay, ascertained the sum of his indebtedness, and paid the same on his behalf. The bare suggestion in a newspaper that Mr. Clay was one of the contributors, or that he had banded together with the Whigs, to pay his debts, is a gross insult to his memory, and a gross insult to the memory of those three gentlemen, who were only three, all gentlemen of vast wealth and all living in distant States. An individual, commissioned by those three gentlemen